'English Language, Linguistics and Translation' MA, 'Translation Studies and Interpreting' Specialization, Course: Translation Practicum, Spring 2019.

Two three-hour Translation Technology sessions with Emmanouela Patiniotaki, UCL.

The aim of these two sessions was to provide students with an understanding of the nature of translation technology and the main architecture of translation tools. The sessions were carried out in the English Language and Literature Laboratory (Room 723) on February 25 and April 8, 2019.

For the two sessions, students were given access to Memsource, a translation tool that belongs to the category of Cloud Technology. Access was given through the instructor's main educational license that is based on a consultative collaboration with the vendor. Students were granted access rights for a period of six months, free of charge. Students' credentials were emailed to all students before the sessions. They were all assigned a translation project with which they were expected to practice on using Memsource.
